It was divided into several parts, as for the first period I was given several sessions to gain more javascript, and .NET FRAMEWORK skills for the project I will work on. Following that, we were taken through the company's system and customs, as well as how the basic operation of their system operates. Furthermore, we were given an overview of how the tools were developed, including how each tool necessitates the development of a unique API and authentication checks. During the remaining three weeks, we were assigned to a separate tool to build, upgrade, and manage a specific tool with a certain supplier. Sometimes I was asked to perform testing of the existing applications or validation of a few test scripts that helped me develop an overall understanding of the functioning of the application.
